

Sterling Achieves Washington Technology's Top 100

Annual List Recognizes the Largest Federal Government Contractors

Dakota Dunes, SD, March 6th, 2019 – Washington Technology, a leading industry publication covering government IT, recently announced its 2018 compilation of the top 100 government contractors. For an impressive third consecutive year, Sterling featured on the list at number 77.

Billed as the authority for government agencies and their industry partners, the Washington Technology Top 100 Government Contractors List annually ranks the largest government contractors based on their prime contracts in IT, system integration, professional services, and telecommunications. Up fourteen spots from 2017, Sterling once more excelled within an industry experiencing change, disruption, and intensifying competition. The South Dakota-based solution provider solidified its place by leveraging top placement on several of the Federal Government's largest contracting vehicles as well as prioritizing investments in infrastructure certifications such as data center, storage, and virtualization.

To make this celebrated list three times in a row requires the strategic management of Sterling's relationships with various federal agencies, says Brad Moore, President and CEO. "Because of years of diligence and a consistent demonstration of our professionalism and expertise, Sterling has cultivated trust among government agencies, earning a reputation as a value-added reseller that does precisely that: adds real, tangible value. From a range of innovative technology solutions to specialty Client and Enterprise Services, Sterling has the capabilities to deliver for any IT need."

Washington Technology's team of experts report all the latest contract services news, then add their analysis, to give readers the actionable information necessary to make smart and strategic decisions around a prime or sub-partnership, contract bids, and resource development. Their rankings are based on an analysis of data from the Federal Procurement Data System-Next Generation. To learn more: www.washingtontechnology.com.
